A number of in vivo and in vitro studies have shown that cardiac myocytes contain latent inducible nitric oxide synthase (iNOS) in the absence of inflammatory stimuli, suggesting that the cell may express iNOS constitutively in response to growth factors. Expression of this enzyme is thought to be associated with hypertrophy of myocardial cells and cardiac failure. The inhibition of nitric oxide (NO) production has been implicated as an approach to treat cardiovascular diseases and inflammation. Studies have shown that NO interacts with and regulates the synthesis
